ESTABLISHED 1787.

Catholysis Apparatus, for the Vogt method in the operation of detachment of Retina, complete with two handles, flex and one each straight and angled insulated electrodes.

This apparatus is fitted with a dead-beat milliamperemeter and has a speed control giving an output of 10 m.a. It is housed in an ebonised case, fitted with a paxoline panel. The battery used is of the dry block type which can easily be replaced when required. It is important to note that the apparatus can be used for other purposes, notably Epilation and Ionisation treatment of Hay Fever.
