

OPHTHALMIC DIATHERMY
(THE OPHTHERM)

The apparatus illustrated above has been designed and specially developed for retinal detachment operations.

It is of the spark-gap type ; the gaps being laboratory set and needing no subsequent readjustment.

A great amount of stability in operations has been achieved with this apparatus, and the output is quite adequate for every type of patient and every degree of tissue resistance.

It is controlled by either foot switch or hand switch, and the current adjustment is made by means of a rotating knob. A plainly engraved, graduated scale enables conditions to be repeated with exactitude, and output is indicated by a high grade Thermo-couple-milliamp-meter protected from any possibility of damage from short circuit by a suitable fuse. A device giving an audible beat each second facilitates the timing of treatment. Except for this deliberate sound, the instrument is quite noiseless in operation. It is suitable for any voltage from 100/250 A.C. 50/100 c.p.s. The whole apparatus is enclosed in a well constructed metal case of pleasing design and finished in black and cream.
